A Survey of Attitudes Among Voters in Staten Island, New York

The following tabulations are based on a survey of 611 voters in the Borough of Staten Island. Trained professionals, working from a central, monitored location, conducted the interviews by telephone during the evening hours between January 9 and 11, 2004. On average, interviews required 15 minutes to complete.

Respondents were randomly selected from an up-to-date file of registered voters in the borough. Some numbers were deliberately altered by computer to ensure the inclusion of those with unlisted, as well as listed, telephone numbers.

Respondents were screened to confirm that they are still registered to vote, and a gender quota was imposed to ensure the sample population is properly representative of the borough-wide electorate.

Each question in the survey has been cross-tabulated by two pages of key demographic, attitudinal and behavioral subgroups. The figures shown in the tabulations are number of respondents and percent. The percentages are column percents, read from top to bottom.

A copy of the topline results, showing the wording of each question and overall results, precedes the tabular section of this report.

TOPLINE RESULTS

(RANDOMIZE)
43. This project would create about 350 permanent new jobs that would pay more than ten dollars an hour, and provide good health-care benefits to both full- and part-time employees	64	13	5	16	2
44. Having a Wal-Mart here in Staten Island would mean more shoppers would spend their money and generate sales-tax revenue here in New York, rather than at nearby Wal-Marts in New Jersey	50	14	8	25	2
45. Wal-Mart has a national reputation for running its stores very well and not creating problems for the surrounding community	53	16	8	19	4
46. The project site is next to a Staten Island Railroad stop, which would provide easy access to the store for customers and employees	44	20	9	24	2
47. Building the new store would generate several hundred unionized construction jobs	54	15	8	22	1
48. The project would bring Wal-Mart to Staten Island, making it easier for residents who currently have to drive to New Jersey to shop at a Wal-Mart	47	15	10	26	2
49. Traffic studies show that the area around the store could easily handle any increased automobile traffic, and the project site has ample room for parking	56	13	5	21	4
50. This project would be built in what is now an abandoned factory building on a former hazardous-waste site, which would be completely cleaned up by the developer	57	12	10	18	3
51. Having a Wal-Mart here on Staten Island would give residents easy access to a wide array of high-quality products at deep discount prices	48	16	10	24	2
52. Now that we have talked about it some, let me ask you – if a Wal-Mart store were to be built in the Tottenville section of the South Shore, would you be inclined to favor or oppose this project?

Favor	67
Oppose	28
(Not sure)	5
